The ECHR and Denmark in facts & figures

Types of judgments

In about 30% of the judgments delivered concerning Denmark, the Court gave a judgment against the State, finding at least one violation of the Convention.

Subject-matter of judgments finding a violation

Half of the findings of a violation concerned Article 6 of the Convention (right to a fair trial), and almost all of those related to excessive length of proceedings.

Impact of the Court’s judgments

The Committee of Ministers, the Council of Europe’s executive body, supervises compliance with the Court’s judgments and adoption of the remedial measures required in order to prevent similar violations of the Convention in the future.

The Court’s judgments have led to various reforms and improvements in Denmark, relating in particular to:

Length of judicial proceedings

Remedial measures have been introduced to expedite proceedings in order to prevent excessive length of proceedings.

Fairness of judicial proceedings

A judge who has taken specific decisions before the trial stage can no longer be involved in the same was as trial or appeal judge.

Freedom of association

Trade union membership cannot be used as a criterion for the recruitment or dismissal of employees. This also applies to the right not to join a trade union.
Case of Hauschildt
(24 May 1989)

Mogens Hauschildt was prosecuted on charges of tax evasion, after which he was sentenced to five years’ imprisonment in 1984. He complained that the same judges who had ruled on the merits of the case had previously taken pre-trial decisions ordering his detention on remand.

Violation of Article 6 (right to a fair trial)

Case of Jersild
(23 September 1994)

Jens Olaf Jersild, a journalist, was fined in 1987 for allowing a youth group to make racist comments on a television programme. The Court found a violation of the journalist’s right to freedom of expression.

Violation of Article 10 (freedom of expression)

Case of Sørensen and Rasmussen
(11 January 2006)

The applicants claimed that pre-recruitment closed-shop agreements in Denmark, and the way in which they had been applied in their case had amounted to a violation of their right to freedom of association. The Court found that both the applicants had been forced to join a trade union, and that such coercion had undermined the very substance of their freedom of association.

Violation of Article 11 (freedom of assembly and association)

Case of Osman
(14 June 2011)

The case concerned the non-renewal of the residence permit of a Somali girl who had been raised with her family in Denmark, after she had spent more than 2 years in Kenya, allegedly against her will. The right to family reunion for children of her age (15 to 17 years) had been abolished during her stay in Kenya.

Violation of Article 8 (right to respect for private and family life)

Case of Biao
(25 May 2016)

The case concerned the refusal of the Danish authorities to grant a Danish national and his Ghanaian wife entitlement to family reunion. The applicants complained about the discrimination in national law between persons who were born Danish and those who, like Mr Biao, had acquired Danish nationality later in life.

Violation of Article 14 (prohibition of discrimination) in conjunction with Article 8 (right to respect for private and family life)

Case of Custers, Deveaux and Turk
(3 May 2007)

A number of Greenpeace activists who had taken part in a campaign at Thule airbase (Greenland) had been convicted of intrusion. They submitted that they had been convicted of an act which, at the material time, had not been a criminal offence under Danish law.

No violation of Article 7 (no punishment without law)

Case of S., V. and A.
(22 October 2018)

In 2009 the applicants were detained for over 7 hours when they were in Copenhagen to watch a football match between Denmark and Sweden. The authorities arrested the applicants in order to prevent hooligan violence. The Court found, in particular, that less stringent measures would not have sufficed to prevent the serious offence of a hooligan brawl.

No violation of Article 5 § 1 (right to liberty and security)
Selected measures to execute judgments

General measures

Case of A. and Others
(8 February 1996)

Length of proceedings for determining compensation for persons contaminated by HIV virus during blood transfusions.

Adaptation of Danish judicial practice in civil cases in order to improve monitoring of compliance with reasonable length of proceedings. Introduction of a special compensation fund.

Case of Sørensen and Rasmussen
(11 January 2006)

Compulsory membership of a trade union as a precondition for recruitment.

Legislative extension of the negative freedom of association, that is to say the right not to join a trade union.

Individual measures

Case of Jersild
(23 September 1994)

Reopening of domestic proceedings against the applicant, a journalist who had been convicted of broadcasting racist comments. The journalist was acquitted after the retrial.
