The European Convention on Human Rights was signed in 1950 and entered into force in 1953. It was the first treaty to create a supranational judicial body to ensure observance of the Contracting States' obligations: the European Court of Human Rights, established in 1959. Since its adoption, the Convention has been amended several times and the original document has been enriched by the addition of numerous rights.