The rights and freedoms contained in the Convention are set out in general terms, and the Court has to interpret them in the context of today’s society, in order to ensure that the Convention is a document which reflects present-day conditions.

The Court’s case-law makes the Convention a dynamic and powerful instrument equipped to meet new challenges and consolidate the rule of law and democracy in Europe.