Delfi AS v. Estonia

16.06.2015

This was the first case in which the Court had been called upon to examine a complaint about liability for user-generated comments on an Internet news portal. The applicant company, which runs a news portal run on a commercial basis, complained that it had been held liable by the national courts for the offensive comments posted by its readers below one of its online news articles about a ferry company. At the request of the lawyers of the owner of the ferry company, the applicant company removed the offensive comments about six weeks after their publication.

The Court held that there had been no violation of Article 10 (freedom of expression) of the Convention, finding that the Estonian courts' finding of liability against the applicant company had been a justified and proportionate restriction on the portal's freedom of expression, in particular, because: the comments in question had been extreme and had been posted in reaction to an article published by the applicant on its professionally managed news portal run on a commercial basis; the steps taken by the applicant to remove the offensive comments without delay after their publication had been insufficient; and the 320 euro fine had by no means been excessive for the applicant, one of the largest Internet portals in Estonia.

Panel of the Grand Chamber

Advisory opinion requested under Protocol No. 16 to the Convention by Estonia

European Court declines Estonian request for an advisory opinion on discontinuance orders by prosecutors

19.02.2024

The European Court of Human Rights has declined a request (no. P16-2023-002) for an advisory opinion submitted by a panel of the Criminal Chamber of the Supreme Court of Estonia. The decision is final.

That court asked the European Court of Human Rights to provide an advisory opinion on an issue arising in a case pending before it, an appeal by a mayor convicted of embezzlement and wilful breach of the public procurement rules. He argued that as the latter charge had been discontinued by a prosecutor at the pre-trial stage of the proceedings, that should count as a final acquittal.

The requesting court wanted to know whether a prosecutor's decision to discontinue criminal proceedings could constitute an acquittal within the meaning of Article 4 § 1 of Protocol No. 7 (right not to be tried or punished twice) to the European Convention on Human Rights and, if so, whether such a decision could be considered final, given that, as happened in this case, it could be revoked by a higher-ranking prosecutor.

The European Court ruled that the request did not raise a "question of principle" as required by Protocol No. 16, i.e., a novel and/or complex question, since the particular issue was the subject of well-established case-law. As shown by a succinct overview of that case-law, the discontinuance of criminal proceedings by a public prosecutor amounted to neither a conviction nor an acquittal, and Article 4 of Protocol No. 7 was therefore not applicable in such a situation.

Protocol No. 16 enables member States' highest national courts and tribunals to ask the Court to give advisory opinions on questions of principle relating to the interpretation or application of the rights and freedoms defined in the Convention or its Protocols. Advisory opinions are not binding. Since Protocol No. 16 came into force on 1 August 2018, the Court has received nine requests for advisory opinions. It has accepted seven and refused two (including the present request). Currently 22 High Contracting Parties have signed and ratified Protocol No. 16 to the Convention.
